Look through your key vocabulary in your course/ revision guide. Do you know all key terms and could you use them in an essay precisely? Test yourself with the meanings. 16. Review all past paper questions- are you confident with them? If you have any issues, use your revision guide, notes, Its Learning to brush up on weak areas before your exam	MOCK EXAMS
Well done on completing your revision and Good Luck!!!! You got this! If Kerensky could survive Lenin and Stalin's purges; you can survive some exams!

Use your course guides for Russia given to you in September

- Can you remember what each of the key individuals did?
 - Do you know your nob's from your nobility???
 - Can you accurately use ALL key terms in a sentence in context?
 - Can you go through your topic check list with confidence that you have covered all areas?
 - Can you answer all the key questions?
 - Can you make a plan for any past paper question using detailed knowledge and examples?
- If so- you are ready for your mock exams- congratulations and good luck!

Some extra revision activities if you cannot do those suggested above:

Use Its Learning- there are resources on here for revision

Use Brainscape flashcards- I have sent you all a link to ones I have made or found

Make your own flash cards especially for key people, key words or key stats about something e.g. Causes Feb Revolution

Watching documentaries is not a productive way to revise as you are passively listening- if you watch a documentary- do something with the info- e.g. if watching a documentary on causes of the 1905 revolution- make detailed mindmap from the info. Be prepared to pause and rewind!
